The TAKE AWAY

I used the Leonardo AI generator to generate pictures of individuals in different roles, I did not precise gender or race (the prompt i put in is exactly the one that appears at the top). Here's my observation; firstly, all of the most prestigious and high paying roles generated men, whereas less prestigious and low paying roles generated women. Which show that there is still a disproportionate amount of men in power roles compared to women, and since there is no biological reason for this it is logical to assume discrimination is to blame for this. Secondly, all subjects came out as caucasien except for two who came back as Asian, but these two were only generated as men. Wich shows very limited improvement for asian men and not at all for any other ethnic group. But once again women of colour were the least represented as there was absolutely no representation for them.
